

Abstract

The compelling experimental evidence for the oscillation of solar and atmospheric neutrinos implies the existence of neutrino mass. The open question for future research in the neutrino physics is determining the nature of massive neutrinos: Majorana vs Dirac. In this talk we briefly review the difference between a Majorana and Dirac particle and then discuss how Neutrinoless double beta decay searches can help us to identify the nature of Neutrinos.