

Abstract

We are looking at the star formation in dense clouds associated with 15 HII regions. We are using JCMT to make large 12 CO maps to study the clumpy structure and to find the dense cores. We then use pointed observations in 13CO and CS in dense cores to measure physical properties that affect the star formation process: density, temperature, clump masses, velocity structure and line widths.