

Abstract

If the scalar tau is the next lightest supersymmetric particle and decays into gravitino being the lightest supersymmetric particle, it will have a very long lifetime. The idea is to add a "stopper detector" to CMS experiment to stop the statistically reasonable number of these scalar taus to study their lifetime and mass. The feasibility of the idea is discussed.