

Abstract

Gran Sasso Laboratory is an underground Lab in Italy located beneath high mountains that hosts a variety of experiments. In this seminar, we will briefly review the past, present and future experiments carried out at this Lab. We will discuss the role that such kind of relatively small scale experiments play to complement our knowledge of fundamental physics.