

Abstract

Using a powerful algorithm for finding arbitrary shaped voids proposed by Aikio and Mahonen in 1998, we have identified and investigated the shapes, sizes and other characteristics of voids in the distribution of volume-limited samples of galaxies extracted from the DR6 SDSS. These samples have been chosen so that we can study the dependence of voids characteristics by choosing different parameters and changing the fibers in which the magnitudes have been measured.