

Abstract

It has been suggested in the literature to install a neutrino detector close to a civil reactor to monitor its nuclear activities. By studying the energy spectrum of neutrinos, it will be possible to determine the composition of the fuel used at these sites. In this session, we shall replay the talk by Prof Lhuillier on such a possibility. We will then review some of the interesting paper recently appeared on the archive.