

Abstract

I will describe how quantum corrections to black hole entropy of astrophysical black holes in emergent theories of gravity could naturally explain the late-time cosmic acceleration without any fine-tuning. I will also discuss the astrophysical tests of this model, and the broader context in which such models can address quantum gravity and cosmological constant problems.