

I first briefly review the concept of CP-violation as well as lepton flavor.

I then discuss experiments searching for lepton flavor violating processes and their implication for new physics.

In the end, I will discuss the novel possibility of measuring CP-violating parameters via polarization measurement in the lepton flavor violating processes.