

In a press conference on February 11th, the LIGO-Virgo team announced that it has for the first time made a direct detection of gravitational waves. These waves are detected by 4 km arm length interferometers and are attributed to a binary black hole merger. In this talk, I will introduce the concept of gravitational waves and their production in black hole collisions. Finally I will explain the experimental setup of LIGO detectors.