

Determining the particles position has been, and still is, one of the most fundamental problems in relativistic quantum theory. In this regard, a “non-local” conserved current is derived for spinless particles and proposed as position probability density. This current is free of “negative probability” and “faster than light particle propagation” problems, and possibly is unique.