

The exceptional surface-to-volume ratio and high electron mobility of 2D materials entitles them as promising candidates for electronic, optoelectronic and other applications. In this talk I shall describe aforementioned unique properties of 2D materials and take advantage of these properties to realize high performance devices.