

Solid inflation is one of the new inflationary models with interesting theoretical and observational features including blue tilt in power spectrum of gravitational waves and large non Gaussianity in squeezed limit. In this talk, the main theoretical aspects of the model will be reviewed. Then, we study statistical anisotropies in anisotropic solid inflation and "clustering fossils" effects on large scale structure from primordial perturbations in solid inflation.